THE
MISSIONARY SOCIETIES
GREAT BRITAIN.

IN Great Britain and Ireland there are more than sixty Societies whose object is the propagation of the Gospel in foreign parts. Twenty-one of these are supported by members of the Church of England; ten are joint Societies of Churchmen and Nonconformists, but derive their funds more from the former than the latter; the remaining thirty-four Societies are supported by the Nonconformists of England, and the Presbyterians of Scotland and Ireland. The total sum contributed in the British Isles to all these Societies, for the year 1871, fell short of 900,000*l*. Complete analyses of the receipts and expenditure of each Society will be found in the following pages.

Missions in Northern India are supported by no less than twenty-two British Societies. South Africa receives Missionary help from seventeen. Fifteen of our Societies are at work in China, and a like number in the Turkish Empire. Fourteen help the evangelization of the West Indies, and as many assist in North East America; while no less than twenty-one British Societies support Missions in the various countries of Continental Europe. The names of these Societies, and of those which are at work in other parts of the world, will be found, under the various local heads, in the analysis of expenditure.

Our Missionary Societies are of five kinds. There are (1) Missionary Societies proper; (2) School Societies; (3) Bible and Tract Societies; (4) Missionary Training Institutions; (5) Aid Societies, which supply grants of money in aid of existing Missions, mostly Missions of Continental or American Societies.

Of the Missionary Societies proper, some, like the Church Missionary Society, work exclusively among the heathen and Mahomedans, and their work is often called the Foreign, as distinguished from the Colonial, the Continental, or the Jewish Mission. Some Societies devote themselves entirely to our British Colonists; some are purely Continental; others, like the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel, combine Foreign, Colonial, and Continental work; while others again, like the Wesleyan Missionary Society, occupy Home stations in Ireland as well as Foreign, Colonial, and Continental stations. The Presbyterian Missionary Societies usually comprise four distinct Boards for the Foreign, the Colonial, the Continental, and the Jewish schemes. The nature and sphere of work of each Society can be ascertained at once by referring to the analysis of expenditure. From these differences in the work of Societies it is extremely difficult, if not impossible, to make any general and just comparison between them as regards results; these differences therefore should always be borne in mind. Some figures respecting results will be found on a subsequent page, but it is quite impossible to make out any complete and accurate tabular statement respecting them.

From a careful analysis of all the Reports it appears that there are now about one million of converts from heathenism in the Mission stations of our British Societies. Of this million of converts, nearly one-third, or 315,231, are found in the Madagascar Missions of the London Missionary Society; this number is greater than that of all the converts in the vast continent of India.

About one-fourth of this million of converts from heathenism are communicants, or adult members in full communion. The number of native ordained ministers amongst them is between 400 and 500. In the Mission schools of the British Societies are children (whose parents are for the most part heathens) to the number of about another quarter of a million.

The British Societies help to supply the means of grace to British Colonists and Continental Christians to the number of about one other million of souls.

A complete list of the Societies, with the addresses of their offices, or Secretaries, will be found upon page 30.

ANALYSIS AND SUMMARY OF THE RECEIPTS FOR THE YEAR 1871, OF SIXTY-FIVE MISSIONARY SOCIETIES IN GREAT BRITAIN AND IRELAND.

So diverse are the methods in which the various Missionary Societies compute their annual income, that the mere enumeration of "total incomes" furnishes an erroneous idea of the support given by the British Isles to the work of Foreign Missions. The two great Societies of the Church of England state simply what has passed through their offices at home. Other Societies add to this the amount raised in the Mission fields. A third method is in use among the principal Nonconformist Societies, which include not only the receipts in Mission fields, but also grants in aid made to their Mission schools by the Colonial Government. The Scottish Societies, still more elaborate in details, include also the fees received from scholars in their Mission schools. A fifth variety arises from the custom of three or four Societies which include Ireland in their Foreign Mission field.

It is evident, then, that before we can arrive at a true statement of British contributions to Foreign Mission work, we must analyse the total incomes ascribed to the various Societies. This is done in the following tables, wherein, as the only point common to all the Societies is the statement of British contributions, the column containing these sums is the only one added up and summarized.

The result of the analysis clears away many erroneous ideas. It shows that the Church of England voluntarily subscribed during 1871 about 400,000*l.* towards Foreign Mission work (vide Tables I. and II.); such a sum as no other single Church in the world, we believe, contributes voluntarily to the same object. The largest annual income given by the British public to any one Society is that of the Church Missionary Society.

In these tables the Societies are arranged in the order to which the amount of support they receive from this country entitles them. In every case, the financial year of the particular Society is adopted.

BRITISH EXPENDITURE UPON FOREIGN MISSIONS.

WHEN we summarize the expenditure for 1871 of all the Foreign Mission Funds gathered in the British Isles, we find that it did not fall far short of 900,000*l*. This sum represents the money actually passing out of the offices at home, and administered from the United Kingdom. When to this we add the sums raised in the Mission fields (subscriptions and Government Grants to Schools), expended there by the agents of the same British Societies, and amounting to about 200,000*l*., we have a grand total of nearly 1,100,000*l*. It then becomes a matter of interest to discover, not only through what Societies, or by what religious bodies, these sums have been raised, but also where, and in what local proportions, they have been expended. In the following pages an attempt is made at imparting this information with respect to the sum (nearly 900,000*l*.) which was administered from the Home offices of the various Societies in the United Kingdom.

Viewing, first of all, the (in the most inclusive sense) New World, to which Missionary enterprise was first directed, we find that in 1871 about 15 per cent. of the expenditure was devoted to America, the West Indies, Australia, and Polynesia. Passing to the Old World, we find African Missions receiving 11 per cent. ; China, 5 per cent. ; and the Turkish Empire rather more than 4 per cent. of the total sum spent upon Foreign Missions. India is rightly made the field of our greatest Missionary labour. To India and Ceylon was devoted more than 27 per cent. of the total expenditure, or about 240,000*l*. Many of the Societies supported by the British Isles have Missions in various countries of Europe ; upon these European Missions no less than 14 per cent. of the whole Foreign Mission Funds was spent. The preparation and expenses of Missionary Students and Candidates cost 2 per cent. ; and the allowances to disabled Missionaries, to widows and orphans, and for the education of Missionaries' children, amounted to rather more than 3 per cent. The whole of the very numerous and extremely varied items of Home Expense, comprehended under the expansive titles of Publications and Printing, Deputations, and the incidentals of offices and official staff, did not exceed 11 per cent. ; although in some few cases, of small Societies, the Home expenses were comparatively very large.

It should be observed that the total expenditure of the year 1871 considerably exceeded the total contributions. The Committees of large Societies have often to take upon themselves the liability of incurring a large debt. They do so trusting to the liberality of those who have the cause of Missions at heart, rather than curtail Missions to whose work curtailment might be fatal. In 1870 the supporters of the Church Missionary Society rescued their Committee from such a deficiency, by a special effort and contribution of 14,000*l.* During 1871 a similar effort was made by the supporters of Wesleyan Missions, who contributed 22,000*l.* to clear off a debt, and for Missions in Rome and Naples.

The tabular views below show what Societies are working, not exactly side by side, but in the same quarters and divisions of the Mission field. At home we sometimes are tempted to think there are too many Societies. The truth is, however, that here we see them like ships in harbour, appearing perhaps to jostle and crowd one another; viewed in the Mission fields they are like the same ships at sea, no longer crashing against each other's sides, but with far too much space for all. Even when steering in parallel courses, they stand each well away from the other, save when signals of distress bring those nearest at hand to give brotherly help and aid.

SOME OF THE RESULTS.

THE impossibility of tabulating the results of Missionary work may well be gathered from the statement of so impartial a witness as Sir C. W. Dilke. In his work on "Greater Britain," that traveller says: "A remarkable change has come over India in the last few years. Small as have been the positive visible results of Christian teaching, the indirect effects have been enormous." Lord Napier, the Governor of Madras, a much more capable witness, has said: "The benefits of Missionary enterprise are felt in three directions, in converting, civilizing, and teaching, the Indian people. The progress of Christianity is slow but it is undeniable. Every year sees the area and the number slightly increase." It is obvious that no figures can represent the civilizing and teaching effects of Missionary work; we must be content to accept the testimony of travellers like Sir C. W. Dilke that those effects are "enormous."

All the Governors of India, men who have the greatest opportunities of knowing the truth, bear similar testimony, and do so, not only in words, but more convincingly still, by ardently throwing their personal influence into the scale on behalf of Missionary work when they return to England, as well as in India. Lord Lawrence, Sir Bartle Frere, Sir Herbert Edwardes, Sir Donald McLeod, and many others who have spent a lifetime in India have repeatedly stood forth to bear witness to the good results of Missionary work, and to their respect for the Missionaries. The census of Missions lately taken in India, contributes, as much as figures can contribute, to strengthen such testimony. From them it appears that during the past twenty years the number of Christian converts in India has been more than doubled. In 1851 it was 93,739, in 1871 it was 214,197; and this too without including Ceylon. The progress made during the last decade was three times as great as during the previous ten years; the number in 1861 being only 138,577. We must remember, however, that this nearly quarter of a million of native Christians, in India, cannot be claimed wholly for the twenty-two British Societies labouring there ; some portion of the credit is due to Missionaries from the United States of America and from Germany.

Another criterion, of Missionary results, is to be found in the large sum, about 200,000*l.*, raised for Mission work in the Mission fields themselves. Yet another testimony, to the work of our Societies, meets us in the many local Missions founded, and largely supported, by laymen on the spot, and placed by them under the Missionaries of British Societies. We may instance the Missions at Umritsur, Peshawur, Dera Ismael Khan, Kangra, Cashmere, and many others.

As a more direct and tangible result of Mission work, we will now enumerate the native ordained ministers of the various Societies. Of these we must place 139 to the credit of the Church Missionary Society, which has 129 still in full connection with it, and 10 in the native churches of Sierra Leone, which it has left independent. The London Missionary Society has 131 native ordained ministers. The Wesleyan Society has 58 in its own Missions, and there are 59 more in the Australasian Missions to which it makes small grants. The Society for the Propagation of the Gospel has about 43 native clergy ; the Moravian Missions have 15 ; the Free Church of Scotland, 9 ; the United Presbyterian Church, 5 ; the Established Church of Scotland, 5 ; and the English Presbyterians have 1. Thus our British Societies have nearly 500 native ordained ministers. In addition to these, some Societies have a very large staff of native preachers and catechists. The London Missionary Society has 3,513 native preachers, and the Church Missionary Society has 2,021 native Christian agents.

So great is the desire to see figures respecting results, that a few will now be put together relating to those Societies which labour among the heathen, wholly or in part ; but so imperfect are the returns, and so variable the forms of those which are furnished, that such tabular statements cannot be considered either fair to the Societies or altogether satisfactory to the inquirer. It must be remembered that no Continental Missions are noticed here ; that the Missions of the Wesleyan Conferences of Australia and Canada, containing 92,321 members, and 140,738 scholars, are unnoticed (the British Wesleyan Society granted to them 5,899*l.*) ; that more than half the numbers placed opposite the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel refer to Canada, &c. ; and that where a dagger (†) is placed there are no returns. The numbers marked with an asterisk (*) include British colonists as well as native Christians :—

The two Societies last named have extensive Missions in Canada and Australasia, the New Connexion Missions numbering 8,126 members, 9,296 scholars, and 34,000 attendants at public worship; the Primitive Methodists have 5,230 members in their Colonial Missions.

The number of British colonists, Continental Christians, and converted Jews, to whom the various British Societies minister in Europe and the Colonies, exceeds one million.

We have seen, then, that for Christian Missions the people of Great Britain contribute not quite 900,000*l.* in a year, whereby they minister to little more than two millions of souls. Surely the claims of Christ upon us, for the spread of His Gospel among the unevangelised hundreds of millions upon our globe, are far greater than can thus be satisfied. Our language is spoken by something like ninety-five millions of people, scattered throughout the world. Our responsibility, therefore, is far greater than that of any other European nation. Can we turn a deaf ear to the Saviour's words, which come echoing down the ages, and sound forth loudly still: "The harvest truly is plenteous, but the labourers are few. Pray ye, therefore, the Lord of the Harvest, that He will send forth labourers into His harvest"? Can we forget the injunction of St. John: "Because that for His name's sake they went forth, taking nothing of the Gentiles, we therefore ought to receive such and help them them forward [see previous verse], THAT WE MIGHT BE FELLOW-HELPERS TO THE TRUTH"?
